Concise description of your organization including relevant history, mission, geography and populations served, and overview of programs

Founded in 1945 in Sonoma Valley, Hanna Center began as a residential school for boys orphaned during World War II. For decades, operating as Hanna Boys Center, the organization provided stability, education, and values-based guidance for young men facing hardship. After years of trauma-resilient care, Hanna formally adopted a trauma-informed approach in 2016. In 2022, Hanna adapted and expanded its mission to more broadly serve youth and families of all genders and backgrounds through an integrated system of care.

That same year, Hanna transitioned its high school into an independent nonprofit, Hanna Academy, exclusively for students with Individualized Education Plans (IEPs) for emotional and behavioral disorders. Hanna also opened the on-campus Community Mental Health Hub—a bilingual, affordable outpatient therapy center serving youth, families, and adults in Sonoma Valley. In 2023, Hanna further expanded its continuum of care with the launch of the Career Center, offering individualized coaching, job readiness training, and financial literacy programs for youth facing significant barriers.

In 2023, Hanna's residential programs expanded to meet the needs of youth in their community by opening its Transitional Housing Program for foster and transitional-age youth ages 16-21. Hanna further deepened this commitment to disadvantaged youth by launching a residential program for students attending Hanna Academy. This integrated residential and educational model provides a stable, therapeutic environment tailored to each student's academic, behavioral, and emotional needs.

Youth in Hanna's residential programs live in cottages that serve as both home and healing space, where youth receive wraparound support that includes mental health counseling, academic tutoring, life skills coaching, and recreation. For foster and transitional-age youth, this environment offers critical continuity and belonging—helping them transition toward adulthood with confidence and stability.

Hanna Center's mission is to transform the lives of youth, families, and communities impacted by trauma and adversity through resilience, connection, and wellness.
Rooted in Sonoma Valley, Hanna envisions a world where every young person has the support they need to heal, grow, and thrive—regardless of background or circumstance.
The organization serves youth and families at critical inflection points, particularly those facing systemic barriers such as foster care involvement, housing insecurity, intergenerational trauma, and limited family support. Through its integrated, trauma-informed model, Hanna meets young people where they are and walks with them toward healthier futures.

Hanna's approach emphasizes belonging, safety, and long-term impact. By partnering with schools, local agencies, and community organizations, Hanna creates environments where youth are not only seen but supported in building stable, meaningful lives. This collaborative, relationship-centered care helps disrupt cycles of harm and fosters lasting resilience and opportunity.

Hanna Center primarily serves vulnerable and high-risk youth, young adults, and families in Sonoma Valley and surrounding areas. The organization's target populations include:
-Youth and young adults ages 12–24, with focused support for foster-involved, system-impacted, and transitional-aged youth (16–21).
-Families and adults accessing bilingual outpatient therapy through the Community Mental Health Hub.
-Alumni up to age 26 receiving follow-on support with education, housing, and employment.

Approximately 60% of Hanna's youth residents and mental health clients are BIPOC, many are primarily Spanish-speaking and come from low-income, immigrant, or mixed-status households. Culturally responsive and bilingual access is essential to Hanna's work.

Hanna estimates that at least 70% of residential youth are low income. Youth in transitional housing often face poverty, educational disruption, and complex trauma—many without family or stable support systems. More than 50% of youth in Hanna's residential youth have experienced 4 or more Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACEs) which include experiences like abuse, neglect, and household dysfunction. ACEs have a cumulative and lifelong impact on health and wellbeing but Hanna's trauma-informed and holistic approach works to mitigate these by providing supportive relationships and resources.

While Hanna's residential and vocational programs serve youth from across the Bay Area, the majority of clients live in Sonoma Valley, a region marked by significant disparities in income, mental health access, and educational attainment. The valley is designated as both a Medically Underserved Population (MUP) and a Health Professional Shortage Area (HPSA)—making Hanna's services an indispensable community resource.

Hanna Center operates as a comprehensive, trauma-informed ecosystem of care designed to meet youth and families at pivotal points in their lives. Its key program areas include:
-Housing & Residential Care – Safe, structured environments for youth facing homelessness, instability, or family disruption, with wraparound supports that foster emotional, educational, and career growth and develop independent living skills.

-Community Mental Health Hub – Bilingual, affordable outpatient therapy for youth, families, and adults, integrating trauma-informed care and culturally responsive practices.
-Training and Research – Help for organizations, direct service teams, educators, mental health professionals and leaders to build healing-centered, trauma-informed practices.
-Recreation and Wellness Programs – Activities promoting physical health, emotional resilience, and community connection through sports, arts, and mentorship.

Together, these services form a continuum of care that supports healing, growth, and independence for young people and families navigating trauma and systemic barriers.

Concise description of the capital project including purpose, goals/objectives and timeline

For nearly 80 years, Hanna Center has provided a healing campus environment for young people navigating trauma, adversity, and system involvement. Today, our group homes—referred to as “cottages”—serve youth ages 14–21 who are enrolled in our on-campus nonpublic school (NPS) and Transitional Housing Program (THP). Many of these young people are in foster care or re-entering stable housing after periods of instability. Our cottages provide more than a roof over their heads—they offer safety, structure, and a consistent place to rebuild trust and imagine a future.

While our model of care has evolved to meet the growing complexity of youth needs, the physical spaces where they live have not kept pace. Most of Hanna’s cottages were built decades ago. Despite ongoing maintenance, these buildings are now aging beyond what regular repairs can address. The youth who live here—many of whom have faced abuse, neglect, or long-term displacement—deserve physical surroundings that reflect their dignity and reinforce their safety. Capital investment is no longer optional; it is necessary to ensure that these homes remain habitable, welcoming, and supportive of healing.

This project will fund essential improvements in two cottages on Hanna’s campus. While the scope of work varies by structure, anticipated improvements include new flooring and interior and exterior painting.
Every element of the renovation will be designed to support a trauma-informed and developmentally appropriate environment. This means paying attention to things like color, lighting, sound, and layout—seemingly small details that can significantly affect how safe and regulated a young person feels in a space. The updates will also improve energy efficiency, reduce maintenance costs, and extend the useful life of these homes for years to come.

Many of the youth in our transitional housing program are preparing to age out of foster care or reentering stability after a period of crisis. Others come to us for residential support while attending Hanna’s nonpublic school, often following disrupted placements or difficulty succeeding in traditional school environments. Most arrive with high ACE (Adverse Childhood Experience) scores, and many have experienced institutional settings that felt more like holding environments than homes. Hanna endeavors to be a place where every young person knows that they matter, belong and have their health and wellbeing prioritized.

Creating physical environments that support that message is essential. A warm room, reliable heat, flooring that doesn’t creak or splinter—these are not luxuries. They are part of the foundation for healing. They’re also critical for Hanna’s long-term ability to offer high-quality residential services as part of our broader continuum of care.

This project will be completed in phases, with youth safety and continuity of care prioritized throughout. During construction, residents will be temporarily relocated to other housing on campus when needed. Program delivery, including schooling, case management, and therapeutic support, will continue uninterrupted. Renovations can begin in April 2026 upon award of funding and will be completed before the fiscal year ends in June 2026. Detailed scope and cost estimates currently being finalized in coordination with our Board of Trustees Buildings and Grounds Committee, external contractors and on-site facilities team.

For Hanna Center, this is not simply a construction project—it's a recommitment to the youth we serve. By investing in safe, stable, and thoughtfully designed housing, we are reinforcing the message that every young person deserves to live in a place that supports their growth and reflects their worth.
